Top 5 things you must ask before laser hair removal - Belfast

Enjoying smooth hairless skin is the ambition of all fashion-conscious women and laser technique has been the choice of many for removing unwanted hair. But do you have all facts about laser hair removal technique? Do you know whether you can benefit from it? What is the guarantee to get the desired results? What if there are any undesirable side effects? And how much will it cost?

How laser hair removal technique works?

Laser hair removal â€“ in Belfast or any other place - is a medical procedure and uses focussed light beams to penetrate, break and destroy hair follicles with hair falling out within next fortnight. Many follicles are removed by a single pulse in a fraction of second and in about 5-6 visits, it can result in 70-75% reduction of hair follicles. Yearly maintenance visits may help in getting optimum results.

Can all people benefit from this technique?

This is an important question. As laser beams react to melanin in the follicle, they get attracted to the melanin in dark skin with light hair with resultant discolouration. So usually laser hair removal - Belfast is best for people with fair and pale skin who have dark hair. But with advanced technology, today there are procedures that suit dark skinned women with lighter hair too though requiring a couple of extra sessions.

Any guarantee for best results with using laser?

Actually, there can be no blanket guarantee that all people can benefit equally or fully. Some people have a quicker rate of re-growth whereas some are lucky to never bother about hair removal. All procedures - laser hair removal - Belfast or elsewhere - will need multiple sessions to zap all follicles. A successful treatment can result in about 70% permanent unwanted hair reductions.

How to avoid untoward side effects from laser hair removal

Getting the best laser surgeon can go a long way in reducing possible harmful side effects like scarring, discolouration - temporary and permanent, burning sensation. Check the professional qualification, training, expertise and experience of surgeon. Getting one or more consultations prior to laser hair removal procedure can be quite educative and helpful.

Cost factors and other considerations

As this is a medical procedure, cost per session of laser hair removal - Belfast and/or other places depend on multiple factors. Actually all you need to know about the procedure can be had from reputed clinics like Laserase Medical Skincare Clinic
