If every December is a month of figuring out how long it will be until Santa Clause gets here, an online countdown timer will be useful. There are many other functions it can serve. Some are fun and some are practical. You could embed one on your blog to tell viewers to remember a particular event crucial to your company.

There are digital and analogue clocks available that can be set to count towards a specific time and date. They generally include days, hours and seconds. A timer on the first page of your website will tell friends they'd better not forget your birthday this year. More presents means more fun.

Should you want one embedded on your blog or website, you needn't worry about difficulty. No knowledge of web coding language is needed. Sites simply ask you to click a button and they do the coding for you.

If you're a doomsday believer, this widget will tell you how much time you have left until the fateful day. It's said by some that on the 21st December 2012 the world will end. There will be an alignment in the galaxy some say will cause natural disasters and a consciousness shift.

This is based on the Mayan calendar. If you don't believe it, a timer can be your tool to tell every one how right you were when the day comes and we're all alive, happily going about our daily chores. No end-of-day prediction has come true yet, after all.

Maybe you're looking forward to Valentines day. Perhaps your beau is chronically forgetful about your anniversary. One solution is to place this application on his blog so that he has no excuses this year.

Of course, he's unlikely to stick around if your teeth are falling out. That's yet another function of this clock. Set it for two minutes to make sure you brush for the correct time period twice a day.

If mornings aren't your best times, this widget can help improve motivation. Putting a huge digital count down on your computer screen can help you climb out of bed on time. Your mornings can be more driven.

If you're constantly late, a timer can get you out the door on time. Knowing exactly how many minutes you have left to leave to house can speed you up. Your boss will be happier if you're timely every day.

Tea connoisseurs insist on steeping their tea for precise times. Green tea requires two minutes while white tea needs three. Longer than that and your cuppa is spoiled. Timers can ensure perfection in that department. Remember to use the correct temperatures for brewing and never, ever pore the milk before you remove the teabag. In the world of tea, that's a heinous sin.

Goals can ensure a focused life. An online countdown timer can help you count toward a set day on which you aim to achieve a lower weight, better fitness or increased productivity at work. If you'd like one on your website, an internet search will reveal many options.
