Time is invested carefully rolling and bending the pen's nib to the perfect rate of elasticity. making an Omas pen, from the gold coating to the ebonite and vulcanized rubber conduit that completely regulates the flow of ink, is a long process and nothing is rushed, but the finished solution is a masterpiece incomparable to anything else on the market.

A completed Omas pen is nothing short of breathtaking. The beauty of an Omas pen is like that of a smoldering sunset, a sultry beach, or a majestic painting; It's definitely Impossible to wrench your eyes away from the unbelievable gorgeousness of it all. Imagine it. You're sitting on the patio of a espresso shop, covered in cheap blue ink and hunched over an agonizingly boring textbook, when you spot a glint of gold glittering in your peripheral vision. You drop the textbook, whip your head around, and spot a hand twirling the most spectacular pen you've ever laid eyes on. The sun's rays reflect off the gold and glistening embedded diamonds, stopping to rest on each of the 12 completely chiseled sides. As the sun moves farther overhead and hits the pen dead on, the whole thing would seem to ignite in a brilliant ball of light that causes spots to appear in your eyes. It's the kind of light that is so Shiny it almost hurts to look at it, but even when you look away, it's still there, usually shining in the cor of your line of sight.

The beauty of an Omas pen is just the beginning. Can you imagine what it would be like to write with such a masterpiece? It would be like writing with the Mona Lisa as your writing instrument. When you grasp an Omas pen between your fingertips, press its chiseled tip to the paper's surface, and smell the sweet aroma of Italian ink as it wafts through your nostrils, a feeling of incomparable power and confidence flows via your veins. You feel as though you could pen the Greatest novel in all of history, like you could make every word you publish sing to the souls of its readers. It is a feeling that cannot be obtained by anything else.
