The Liebeck v. McDonald's Restaurants case, widely known as the "hot coffee lawsuit", is just one of the most shocking suits documented in history. Stella Liebeck got approximately $ 2.8 million as payment for the physical trauma she obtained from the hot McDonald's coffee.. Until now, the nation is divided whether the claim was too overstated or worth fighting for.

Cases such as the "hot coffee lawsuit" are just a few examples of the most uncommon claims ever filed in court. Whether personal injury or auto wrecks, exaggeration of claims is something that has gone into full afterburner, with the said claim being among the pioneers. Perhaps it is best for food to be consumed in the restaurant or if the car is at full stop. Similar to liquor and mobile phones, food-to-go can make you distracted.

On a related case, a couple of months before Liebeck's success, a man filed a suit against the same restaurant chain because of a spilled milkshake. After buying his milkshake and fries from the drive-thru window, he drove away with the milkshake in between his legs. Obviously, it was an unlikely place to put a milkshake. He spilled his milkshake, got distracted, rammed a car from behind, and blamed McDonald's for the absence of a warning label.

Although the case was disregarded by the court, these incidents may hold a lesson worth learning. Normally, the auto wreck attorney Utah residents consult with can guide you with legal matters and other concerns. However, as the attorney's client, you also must be responsible when making your complaints. Judges typically do not enjoy settling outrageous claims, with most of them being scrapped without hesitation.

When consulting a car wreck attorney Utah has to offer, always make sure that your claim is worth fighting for. After all, the court is a place where involved parties can settle things peacefully and on reasonable terms. As it is a driver's responsibility to drive safely, a person's duty is to be accountable for whatever action he takes. Being a responsible individual accounts for the prompt and fair resolution of any case submitted to the court.

Maybe the judiciary arm has yet to see the last of these uncustomary claims, but count on a Utah car wreck attorney to deal with them. If you are the target of an outrageous complaint, a highly skilled attorney can protect you from being accountable for something peculiar. Liebeck's victory may remain in the archives of history, but a situation similar to this may only happen once in a while.
