Special Education Teacher - a Profession Worth Cherishing by Manu

Article published on January 9th 2012 | Education

How many times have we after our day long work got a feeling of contentment, a feeling that we have done something meaningful today? Well, the answer may be difficult to find because maximum of us work for ourselves, living a robotic life. But there are people who work for others and cherish their profession. Special education teacher NYC is mentor to a child and makes a valuable impression on that child for life. Special education teachers usually stick to their post for many years before being transferred because it is so gratifying. Once you get to know your students and you sustain your classroom, the children will have a sense of steadiness and everything works well together.

A good Special education teacher NYC is ardent about her students and knows this is what she is supposed to do. A good teacher should treasure her students despite the hindrances and if you own a real passion for teaching special education kids, then this should not be intricate at all. A lot of people go in to it wondering they were called to do it but after spending some time with the kids and going through the ups and downs that come with the job, they give up because they can't handle the stress.

A special education teacher is an exceptional job that not everyone can do. It takes hard work, empathy, and the aptitude to love and nurture your children that generates a positive environment that a child can be trained in. Work with parents, grandparents, relatives, friends, and professionals that have a helping hand in that child's life to accomplish the goals that you set for the child and to help them realize all landmarks. A special education teacher NYC needs structure and organization skills a lot more than the standard teacher because special needs students take time to be acquainted and be at ease with their surroundings. You should be able to provide a stable environment for them and some permanence by being on time, planning the lessons ahead of time and sustaining anything else that helps the students be more at ease with you.

A special education teacher, without confidence will not be able to make much of an impact on her students. Many of these students can differentiate between weak and strong characters, and retort differently to both. Without the self-assurance and confidence needed, you might have a hard time being followed. Be devoted to your students. Many of the students you will be instructing may be having you as the first reliable partner in their life, and this will definitely build an attachment. Try and be a strong dedicated mentor for them, it will go a long way in enhancing their self-confidence and independence because if they get to see that you trust them and they can believe in themselves, it will make them stronger.

Once you have a place as a special education teacher NYC the first thing you should be doing is sending a letter home with all your students to introduce yourself to parents and guardians. Ask for a one-on-one meeting with each parent/guardian within the first two weeks of initiating. Meeting with the parents will give you the chance to comprehend more about every child from a parent's point of view. No other person can give you an observation of that child better than the parents/guardians.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/special-education-teacher-a-profession-worth-cherishing.htm - Article Side

Manu - About Author:
The author of this article owns a New York State Special Education school offering seminars, workshops, a special needs schools Nyc & summer learning disability programs for children using Ortan Gillingham method.

Article Keywords:
nyc special education, new york special education, math learning disabilities

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!