Some car buyers are faced with the decision of getting a new or a used one. Both options have their advantages, but the cost advantages of getting a used car may prove attractive to a lot of people. A reliable used car can offer just as much as a new one without the unnecessary costs involved.

Not everyone is aware that the moment a new car is driven out of the car lot, it instantly loses twenty to twenty five percent of its original value. Kelley Blue Book, the biggest car valuation company in the United States, ratifies that a new car with as little as a thousand miles practically has already lost twenty to twenty five percent of its value.

In reality, all cars on the road are technically used cars already. Whoever put the first hundred miles matters only as much as who put the tenth hundred miles. In addition, a lot of vehicles produced in recent years have much more features that enable them to run with better fuel efficiency and last longer than car models produced several decades ago.

About twenty five years ago, cars were only designed to reach about a hundred thousand miles before needing a major overhaul. These days; however, cars are made to last and run thrice as much as before, thus making the purchase of second hand cars a smart move.

In addition to being an economic choice, the purchase of used cars in Indianapolis is also a green choice. Buying a used car will lower oneâ€™s carbon foot print by reducing the environmental effects of manufacturing new cars. Also, with the longer lifespans of cars these days, your used car will last for many years. Just like kids today are asked to reduce, reuse and recycle, why not apply the same when it comes to your vehicle purchase?

Used cars Indianapolis residents prefer can be acquired from several sources. There are people who like buying from private owners and there are those who prefer certified used car dealers. Buying from a private seller may reduce the cost; however, you only have one or two choices since usually they sell the car they want to replace. But when you get it from a dealer, you are assured of a better selection, parts in good working condition, and even an extended warranty. These are the things you cannot get from private sellers.

Lastly, when you get used cars Indianapolis Indiana residents prefer, you can actually upgrade your existing car to a better but used one. Now is your chance to get that dream sports car, pony car, muscle car or sports utility vehicle youâ€™ve always wanted to have.
