Auto Accidents: Importance of Proving Who is at Fault by Ethan Rehman

Article published on March 9th 2012 | Business

The Liebeck v. McDonald's Restaurants lawsuit, popularly dubbed as the "hot coffee lawsuit", is one of the most outrageous lawsuits documented in history. Stella Liebeck got around $ 2.8 million as payment for the injuries she obtained from the scalding McDonald's coffee.. Until now, the country is divided whether the lawsuit was too overstated or worth fighting for.

Cases such as the "hot coffee lawsuit" are just a few examples of the most uncommon claims ever filed in court. Whether personal injury or auto wrecks, exaggeration of claims is something that has gone into full afterburner, with the said lawsuit being one of the pioneers. Perhaps it is best for food to be consumed in the restaurant or if the vehicle is at full stop. Similar to alcohol and mobile phones, food-to-go can get you distracted.

On a related suit, several months before Liebeck's success, a man filed a suit versus the same restaurant chain because of a spilled milkshake. After ordering his milkshake and fries on the drive-thru window, he drove away with the milkshake in between his legs. Apparently, it was a strange place to place a milkshake. He spilled his milkshake, got distracted, struck a car from behind, and pointed the finger at McDonald's for the absence of a warning tag.

the case was disregarded by the court, these incidents may have a lesson worth learning. Normally, the auto wreck attorney Utah residents speak with can guide you with legal matters and other concerns. But, as the attorney's client, you also have to be responsible when making your claims. Judges normally do not enjoy managing outrageous claims, with most of them being scrapped readily.

When consulting a car wreck attorney Utah has to offer, always make sure that your claim is not senseless. After all, the law court is a place where involved parties can settle things diplomatically and on agreeable terms. Just as it is a motorist's duty to drive safely, a person's duty is to be liable for whatever course of action he takes. Being a responsible person accounts for the speedy and fair resolution of any case filed to the court.

Maybe the judiciary arm has yet to see the last of these outrageous claims, but count on a Utah car wreck attorney to deal with them. If you are the target of an outrageous lawsuit, a highly skilled attorney can protect you from being liable for something peculiar. Liebeck's victory may remain in the archives of history, but a situation similar to this may only happen once in a while.
