On Figuring out Who is to Be Blamed in an Auto Accident by Ethan Rehman

Article published on March 9th 2012 | Business

Among the unusual cases filed in the court, one of the most controversial is the Liebeck v. McDonald's Restaurants case, also known as the "hot coffee lawsuit". In 1994, Stella Liebeck won more than $ 2.8 million total worth of damages after her 49-cent cup of coffee inflicted third-degree burns on her pelvic region. Until now, the country is divided whether the claim was too overstated or worth fighting for.

Claims such as the "hot coffee lawsuit" are just a few examples of the most shocking claims ever documented in court. Whether personal injury or auto accidents, exaggeration of claims is something that has gone into full afterburner, with the said claim being among the pioneers. Probably it is best for food to be consumed in the restaurant or when the car is at full stop. Similar to alcohol and cell phones, food-to-go can get you distracted.

On a related case, a couple of months before Liebeck's victory, a man filed a complaint against the same restaurant chain because of a spilled milkshake. After purchasing his milkshake and fries from the drive-thru window, he drove away with the milkshake in between his legs. Apparently, it was a strange place to put a milkshake. He spilled his milkshake, got distracted, struck a car from behind, and blamed McDonald's for the absence of a warning label.

Though the case was disregarded by the court, these incidents may have a lesson worth learning. Typically, the auto wreck attorney Utah residents consult with can help you with legal issues and other concerns. But, as the lawyer's client, you also must be responsible when making your complaints. Judges typically do not enjoy settling outrageous claims, with most of them being scrapped readily.

When asking a car wreck attorney Utah has to offer, always make sure that your claim is worth fighting for. After all, the court is a place where involved parties can resolve things peacefully and on reasonable terms. As it is a driver's obligation to drive securely, a person's duty is to be accountable for whatever action he takes. Being a responsible individual accounts for the speedy and fair resolution of any case filed to the court.

Perhaps the judiciary arm has yet to see the last of these ridiculous claims, but expect aUtah car wreck attorney to deal with them. If you are the target of an outrageous complaint, a highly skilled lawyer can protect you from being accountable for something peculiar. Liebeck's victory may remain in the archives of history, but a situation like this may only happen once in a while.
