In the year 1993, Russian Constitution has granted the liberties and rights of citizens of Russian Federation under the provisions of Chapter 2. The country of Russia is the sign for UDHR i.e. Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In addition, this country has approved several instruments of human rights, along with ICCPR i.e. International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and ICESCR i.e. International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, along with reservations for ECHR i.e. European Convention of Human Rights. All these instruments of global legalization have taken the precedence of all the countryâ€™s own legalization, as highlighted from the provisions contained in Chapter 1 of Russian Constitution.

We know that member of COE i.e. Council of Europe in Russia has some international obligations associated with human rights issues. At the time of introduction to the report of 2004 about situation of Russia, Human Rights Commissioner of COE has observed some remarkable amendments at the time of collapsing of Soviet Union. Therefore, commissioner has revealed, â€œAlthough, fledging democracy in the country of Russia is far away from being perfect, but still we cannot deny the existence and remarkable successes of this country.â€•

During the recent years, present Russian Federation Ombudsman, Vladimir Lukin has consistently characterized the Russian situation about human rights in unsatisfactory manner. However, according to Lukin, it is not discouraging as construction of lawful state as well as civil society in one among the complex countries of Russia is one among the long and hard process.
