When an individual visits their health care professional, the last thing they expect is negligence. After all, the health care provider is the specialist with years of schooling and experience in treating patients with various conditions. Unfortunately, health care professionals can be negligent and 100,000 deaths result annually due to their negligence.

A medical malpractice case does not just have to be a fatality. It can be any level of neglect. Medical malpractice is an act of negligence that is intentional or unintentional and results in an injury or suffering to their patient. It can be a simple negligence or it can be severe, and if you find that you are suffering due to what should not have occurred, or that you were not fully informed in regards to a procedure and you have negative consequences due to the procedure, you have, or may have, a medical malpractice suit on your hands and a Farmington Medical Malpractice Lawyer can help.

The role of the Farmington Medical Malpractice Lawyer is to determine if you have a case. Once the lawyer has determined that you do, indeed, have a case, they will then begin to put your case together. This will involve many steps, such as ensuring that you have current medical treatment, and counseling, if needed, that the insurance companies are handled, that medical professionals are contacted to discuss your condition and future situation and all other aspects that are involved to ensure that your case is completely represented and that you will receive the maximum amount of compensation.

Your initial consultation with a Farmington Medical Malpractice Lawyer may be at no cost. This is the time that the lawyer will discuss your case and let you know if you do have a case. The initial consultation allows you to get to know the Farmington Medical Malpractice Lawyer so that you can determine if they are the best suited for you and your needs. It is important to have all documentation representing your case with you during the initial consultation.
