From Speed to Need: Cars Auto Dealers Sell that Have Racing Technology by Erwin Calverley

Article published on February 23rd 2012 | Business

Race cars are built for speed, while your family sedan is built for your needs. A race car is for a pro driver who handles the wheel well, a family sedan is for anyone with a driverâ€™s license. Then again, is there really a difference between a car that goes twice or thrice the highest speed limit in the United States and a car that does not? While a plain look at these two cars may nod your head, a closer look says otherwise.

What you may be driving on the road right now may have parts derived from racing technology. Just as much as race car drivers need these innovations to give them the edge in the race, normal drivers can find these features in their family car. The technology employed between the two cars may be different, but it does not necessarily mean that one cannot be applied to the other. Below are some features from race cars that are incorporated into commercial vehicles.

Dual transmission: Race car drivers usually prefer the stick shift for their cars, but in a race, they may not have the luxury of changing gears properly. Car manufacturers thought about the driver enjoying the best of both transmissions: manual and automatic. The result is a gearbox that can be set into drive for automatic shifting or be switched to manual shifting. You can determine this if the transmission has a plus and minus sign beside Drive.

Tire grooves: Everyone knows by now that a tire is not just a plain slab of rubber, as it has a set of grooves to improve performance. Both race cars and commercial cars employ tires with a set of grooves to be able to move perfectly across various types of terrain: dirt, snow, wet roads, and so on. Indianapolis auto sales include these tires, in which the grooves help them last longer.

Engine air intake: When you see a car that has a small hole on top of a hood, you know that car means coolness. The engine air intake is not anything new to the car industry but it is iconic for cars that possess exceptional speed. Several car models Indianapolis auto sales sell have these nifty features that help them breathe especially when overworked.

Sleek body: You know that it has a sleek body when the design differs from the traditional car. However, this design in several cars Indianapolis auto dealers sell is not just for show. Car manufacturers have designed these sleek bodies with the concept of aerodynamics in mind. In other words, such a car can reach blinding speeds while looking sexy.
