There is a misconception that men don't find it difficult to choose a pair of jeans. Men are often perceived less fashionable than women because they simply grab the first thing they see from their wardrobe. In reality, men put a lot of effort in choosing a pair of jeans they can wear at home, on casual Fridays, on dates, and practically any occasion.

Unfortunately, when it comes to choosing the right pair of jeans, many still fall wide of the mark. "Men make so many mistakes in their choice of denims," says Dan Peres, editor of a men's style magazine. "Really, it should be the easiest style choice a guy has to make, what jeans to wear," he added. If you're about to shop for a new pair of jeans, here are a few things to consider before entering the fitting room.

Where and When

Quick fact: the average American owns seven pair of jeans. Each pair should comport with the environment you are in, say, if it's reserved strictly for parties, work, or school. Even the best-looking pair of jeans will look odd when worn in the wrong place.

Find the Right Fit

Choosing a pair of jeans is like setting out on a journey to find Ms. Right; it's tough, it takes time, and your choice should fit in perfectly. You also need to consider fit, namely: straight cut, flare cut, wide leg, and low rise. Jean cuts greatly depend on the wearer's body type, so it is wise to use style and grooming magazines for reference.

Timeless Washes are the Safest

Fashion trends are ephemeral; one moment you're hot, the next moment you're not. When you're out buying from mens jeans sale, stick with tried-and-true denim styles like the original blue jeans, slightly faded blue jeans, and dark denims. Steer clear of flashier colors and funky washes that quickly get outdated. In contrast, vintage denim colors will surely stand the test of time.

Project Runway

The best way to tell how well your pair of jeans fits is by trying them on with the wardrobe you wear the most. Walk around the mall's isle to determine how comfortable it is, and check the pocket space when you sit down. Make sure to try more than two pairs and donâ€™t be blinded by any sign that says â€œsale mens jeansâ€•.

It's never easy to choose a pair of jeans, but putting much effort into your choice can save you from the fashion police. Visit shops with for sale menswear to keep in style. Log on to AskMen.com for expert insights on choosing men's jeans.
