The pictures you see in magazines of well known stars, musicians, athletes and political figures are designed to stimulate feelings in the people looking at them. From excitement, to peace, to jealousy, and every feeling in between, these kinds of vibrant and interesting people have talents and personalities that can't easily be captured on film. So how is it done?

If you've ever thought about about the person guiding the lens of those lovely celebrity pictures you see in magazines, then you already know the answer. Celebrity photographers are qualified in and experienced with capturing pure emotion and ability on film. These people have just as much natural talent as the men and women they are photographing, and usually work in one or two of three different categories.

Event photography is one of the most important categories in which celebrity photographers work. Movie premiers, social gatherings, award shows, music festivals and exclusive functions are only a few of the events that these photographers work. ` they may be hired by publicists or publications for red carpet events, and sometimes they are chosen by the celebrities themselves for wedding receptions or birthday parties.

Pictures taken at parties are what you routinely see in magazines. To illustrate, if you have ever watched fashion coverage of a red carpet event in a magazine, it was most likely a paid celebrity photographer who took the photographs. And the photos you see on new music channels from their live events? These were also taken by celebrity photographers.

Another main group that celebrity photographers work in is celebrity portraits. Many of these are the more personal photographs you see of celebrities, much like the ones that accompany the interviews you find in magazines. These types of photos are the ones that are designed to find the essence of each celebrity, and to give the viewers a peak into who that person really is in their private life.

Celebrity portraits are also used on album covers, in magazines as stated before, and even in celebrity's individual portfolios. They are also designed for the same things that all people use photography for - to capture a lovely family portrait. After all, celebrities are first and foremost people, and take family photos just like anybody else.

The next category that celebrity photographers work in is media press, which is when the photographer takes candid pictures of celebrities. As you know paparazzi photographers have a reputation for bothering stars, a reputation that's deserved. But not all paparazzi photographers deserve this reputation. Many work under their own ethical standards, and quite often only take pictures if they have permission. The fact is that you do not hear about these types of photographers very often.

The next time you see an amazing picture of your favorite musician, actor or actress, vocalist or politician, you now know a bit more concerning the skill behind the camera. Without having celebrity photographers, and their true talents, we wouldn't be able to get a look into who our favorite famous people really are.
