How to Choose a Philadelphia Personal Injury Attorney by Hank Aaron

Article published on May 9th 2012 | Business

Searching for a Philadelphia personal injury lawyer is easier said than done. If you have suffered a serious personal injury, youâ€™ll need to hire an attorney with plenty of experience and strong familiarity with cases like yours. You should not make the mistake of assuming that any Philadelphia personal injury attorney will be a good fit to represent you. Rather, look for someone who has specific experience in successfully handling personal injury cases that are similar to yours.

You will find that there are many personal injury attorneys from whom to choose, so it may seem overwhelming initially. However, there are a few steps you can take to help narrow down the pool and hone in on a qualified Philadelphia personal injury lawyer who can best serve your needs.

Investigate the attorneyâ€™s area of focus

Before choosing a Philadelphia personal injury attorney, you should understand if the lawyer has experience in representing people with injuries similar to yours. Often, personal injury lawyers focus their practices on certain type of claims. Conversely, many have broad experience across many types of injuries. Be sure to ask about potential attorneysâ€™ particular experience. You can elect to hire a solo lawyer or a law firm. However, if you decide to hire a personal injury law firm, make sure that you first meet with the specific attorney within the firm who will be assigned to your case to ensure his or her experience is a good fit for your case.

Analyzing how successful the lawyer is

Premier law firms like the Law Offices of Robert W. Sink have a high success rate for converting multi-million dollar claims to successful verdicts. This law firm has consistently recovered compensation over the years for its clients. This is a clear indication of the outstanding success of this law firm. If the Philadelphia personal injury lawyer you hire has this kind of success, then you have a higher probability of winning your case.

Ask for referrals

Sometimes the best place to start is with friends and family to see if theyâ€™ve used a Philadelphia personal injury lawyer in the past that they would recommend. This is a great way to learn about an attorneyâ€™s personality and communication style as well. Ask if the recommended attorney was easy to get a hold of, how quickly he or she returned phone calls, and how comfortable he or she was with answering clientsâ€™ questions.

Discuss fee structure

Determine how much your Philadelphia personal injury attorney will charge for litigating your claim. Some lawyers and law firms work on a contingency fee basis. This means they collect no fees until (and unless) your case is successful. In these cases, the attorney is generally paid a percentage of the award he or she secures for his/her client. This is a great arrangement for clients who do not have the money up front to pay for an attorney. Some other attorneys charge an hourly rate and will require payment prior to the completion of the case.

When you choose a law firm such as the Law Offices of Robert W. Sink (www.sinklawoffices.com), you get the benefit of being represented by a nationally-recognized and highly successful law firm based in Philadelphia.
