Itâ€™s no secret that ordering all new furniture for a salon will come at an expensive price tag, but knowing the right channels for getting equipment can help save you some cash. Buying all brand new furniture may be too costly for a person and owners may not want to take out a huge loan to help fund the items as well as the store, especially when used equipment is available. Be smart with your purchases and see how wise it would be to purchase used furniture with prices up to 40-50% off, and then use that saved money to reinvest in your business.

Name Brand

Some items may not be as reliable as you would like them to be, and after the daily use, can stop working and cause you to spend even more money to fix or replace them. You can find items that will come with a reliability and endurance to survive the constant use, especially when your salon is open six days a week and they are running 10-12 hours a day. Itâ€™s important to do your homework on the device youâ€™re about to buy to see just how reliable the equipment is, asking how much money it costs to fix; how frequently does the device need maintenance; and what parts tend to break the most. Ask around; call merchants if you have to and get to know the product youâ€™re purchasing before you decide to cough up the money to pay for refurbished salon furniture.

Trusted Reseller

You want a reseller who you can trust, and just like the product you end up ordering, the dealer has to have particular guarantees to make you feel comfortable getting equipment from them. Vendors who have extended warranties, and are willing to give you all of your money back if the day ever comes that the item stops working, tend to provide a product thatâ€™s worth ordering because of the added guarantee. Always look for the description of the used product that certifies if the item has been inspected to ensure its performance, or ask if they offer any warranty or sell any parts just in case you need them down the road. Unlike shampoo bowls, ordering used spa furniture comes with its own set of headaches, from being concerned about the name brand to having to deal with getting an added warranty. However you go about it, try to get any safeguards, such as an extra warranty, to avoid the hassle of having to call technicians to repair the equipment that you just bought for your salon.
