Learn How to Write a Literature Review in Just Few Minutes by Donna Santos

Article published on January 6th 2012 | Education

Critical analysis is a very important chapter of a thesis. Its format differs from university to university and basically depends on the subject under discussion.

It can be of various types. It depends on for what you are writing the analysis. It is a very important constituent of Masters Dissertation.

Generally, when we write a critical analysis, our purpose is to analyze the already published stuff on the topic. We read everything and then basically summarize it in our chapter. We make classifications, comparisons, and then make our own conclusions and recommendations.

Now let is begin with the writing process of doing a literature review:

Writing the introduction:

You must begin with introducing the topic. Introduce the research question to the audience so that before proceeding they have a general idea about the whole context.

Writing a critical analysis is not an easy task. This is because you have to carefully go through every research made on the topic and then make out the differences, similarities, and conflicts. And then write a general idea in your context. You will have to mention the methodologies that have been used for the researches by investigators. Discuss the problems the researchers might have faced during the investigation, and if any new interesting advancement has been made relating to your topic, and then mention it in your writing.

Put forward the reasons behind the researchers decision of taking up this topic for investigation. Explain the method by which they analyzed the entire research and organized the context.

Writing the body:

When writing the body of the essay, you will have to take every researcher is point of view individually and then discuss it in your writing. You do not have to be very detailed, just give brief description of the motivations behind the investigation and the methods of reaching to conclusions.

The reader requires strong sentences at the beginning of every paragraph. This strategy makes reading more interesting for him. And it is also suggested that you provide the reader with brief summary sentences and comparisons so that the reader does not get lost and confused.

Writing the conclusion:

Offer to summarize the main conclusions of the researchers of the articles and studies that you have taken up.

During your research and entire study, if you found any flaws or gaps, mention them in the conclusion of the chapter. Offer your suggestions on how the research could have been made better. Any particular issues that got highlighted in your mind relating to the study, you can mention it here and discuss the solutions you think are possible.

Lastly relate the conclusions and the entire study with your subject and give reasons why this topic was of interest to you personally.

Many students do not know how to write a literature review. But if you have sufficient guide regarding the writing process, you do not find it that difficult.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/learn-how-to-write-a-literature-review-in-just-few-minutes.htm - Article Side

Donna Santos - About Author:
Donna Santos is a senior research writer and provides help for a how to write a literature review and a doing a literature review.Feel free to contact for any sort of help in this regard.

Article Keywords:
how to write a literature review, doing a literature review

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!