Education has hardly any boundaries and this is mostly visible in the professional courses, which are very high in demand. Technically qualified students join the workforce at an early age, just after getting the required qualification. Sometime later, they feel the need of going for some other qualification in order to further fulfil their careerist goals. Developing countries are going for industrialisation and there is a need of good professional managers to help in the growth of the industry in that certain region. Good managerial staff can handle a large number of low end workers and improve productivity.
