Nigeria is Soaring High on the Wings of Literacy by Harry Martin

Article published on March 28th 2012 | Education

People, round the globe have a right to being educated well. Education these days has become essential for the betterment of a nation. Education has been documented and preserved for generations. Education has also evolved through the generations. Every child has a right to study, a right that is beyond caste, creed and colour. Unfortunately, few countries in the world have been subjected to social, economical and political upheaval, causing collateral damage. Education has been interrupted and sometimes even deprived, leaving thousands of young souls thirsty for a drop of it.

In Nigeria, people of all age groups have suffered due to negative effects of social and political disturbances. The youth have been deprived of something they needed most. Something so effective that it would heal the wounds of a scarred nation. Education has the power to change the face of a nation, and Nigeria needs just that.

Many people wonder how education can change the face of a nation like Nigeria. Nigeria is the most populous country in Africa, it is also one of the fastest growing economies in the world, depending mostly on natural resources like petroleum. However, this is not sufficient enough to meet the basic needs of the population. Their goal of eradicating poverty and hunger is slow. Political instability, corruption and poor governance have affected the growth of the nation. Education has been on the decline due to decaying institutional infrastructure. The need for educational growth is important for the country to meet the demands of their people.

Few universities from U. K. have been helping out Nigeria, to turn it into a nation where dreams can be turned into reality. A nation where hidden possibilities can be re-discovered. On introducing online study programmes for under graduate and post graduate studies, UK Universities in Nigeria have not only offered a scope for the youth to shine but also to make a mark in the world. For the economically deprived, to study online in Nigeria, is more than a golden opportunity. With the growing popularity of online studies, Nigeria has received a right to quality education. Online programmes have helped those who live in remote parts of Nigeria. Technology being the key to success in the world today is being used rather effectively by students in Nigeria, who aim to fly high. Out of the study programmes, an MBA degree is the most popular. These study programmes have been helping out students as well as working professionals.
