The land of temples decked with gold, jasmine flowers, holiness and education, Chennai is the cultural hub and the capital city of the Southern state of Tamil Nadu. Formerly known as Madrasapattinam, over the years the British shortened it to Madras. In 1996, the State government changed the name from Madras to Chennaipattnam when many Indian cities were being renamed. Chennai is the fifth most famous Metro city in India with a population of about 10 million and is well known for its glittering film industry.

Chennai is an ancient seat of learning and today, is home to a number of reputed colleges and universities. Infact, it is the culture that makes education thrives in Chennai where the people themselves believe there can be no shortcuts to education. The number of schools though few are some of the most prestigious and lay an immense amount of stress on the overall development of the child. The teachers though lesser paid compared to their counterparts in other States, still come up with innovative methods of teaching. Though an immense amount of importance is given to education there is a stark gender bias still seen in the rural areas where the girls are not encouraged into joining schools.

Vocation education assumes prominence in the rural areas and school dropouts. In contrast, the cities have a number of CBSE run schools in Chennai apart from the IGCSE, ICSE and State Board affiliated schools. The CBSE run schools from the Pre-primary to Higher Secondary level and except for the Kendriya Vidyalaya, where the medium of instruction is bilingual involving English and Tamil, the rest of them are English medium schools.

The contribution of the Christian run schools is significant some of the top schools in Chennai are run by Jesuit priests and Roman catholic fathers like St. John's English School and Junior College, Sacred Heart and presentation school apart from the Private run PSBB Senior Secondary School, DAV School and SBOA School & Junior College, which have also carved a niche for themselves over the years. A striking feature is the amount of impetus the Government programs give the State run schools. The free midday meals scheme, free bicycle scheme are all Government initiatives to promote education and bring the girl child into the classroom.

There are not very many nurseries in the city, except for those attached to mainstream schools, so the quality of education is preserved. Education still hasnâ€™t become a business in Chennai and serves to be the ideal place for education.
