Article Side

Recommended Skeleton Framework Based on Seven Points for Writing Management Dissertations

by Donna Santos

Article published on November 26th 2011 | Education

Internet is such a big medium which has an answer for your every question whether its on how to write a thesis or how to take care of your skin. This has given a tremendous boost to the information flow worldwide.

A dissertation is something that can end up on exceptional marks for you but if not written well, it can result into a total disaster. This is why; most of the students seek internet help to get some useful information on writing and completing a project within the given time frame. There might be many useful management dissertation pdf files available over the internet but they would not be of any use for you cannot use them as it is.

So the secret which I am going to reveal for you is to write your thesis with the help of a proper structure. There is no standard structure to come up with a thesis for it always depends on the nature of a topic you are working on but I am going to tell you an ideal format that will be of really help to you hopefully.

Skeleton framework for structuring a dissertation

Identification

Abstract

Introduction

Discussion

Conclusion

Acknowledgements

Bibliography

IDENTIFICATION:

This section should be laid out on A4 size paper and might be dressed up with different styles as per the advice of your teacher.

Identification is a section where you will provide the author is name, supervisor is name, name of the college or university and title of your thesis.

ABSTRACT:

Here you will condense the whole project into a single paragraph with an ideal word count of 250 words. There are four major requirements of an abstract which are:

Problem identification

A glimpse of the solution you will offer

A short glimpse of the conclusion

THE INTRODUCTION:

Here you will only provide a brief introduction to the topic, its background and the problem you will be addressing in the forthcoming paper. It will manifest your competence in searching for the subject and how will it be presented in the project.

THE DISCUSSION:

Body of your project where you will elaborate the question you have mentioned in the earlier pages. Your claims must be backed up with rational arguments and evidences that will justify the conclusion in the end.

THE CONCLUSION:

Final answer that you have culminated from all your hard efforts will be presented here to be analyzed by the reader. Here, you might also suggest further lines of inquiry in the same subject. Restrictions and limitations might also be given here.

THE ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:

Thesis is not an overnight work; it involves extensive hard work and research work from the side of an author. There are various people which may have helped you through the painstaking research process. You will be acknowledging those people in this section whether you are working on events management dissertation or human resource management dissertation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY:

Here you will properly document all the sources you have used in your thesis.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/recommended-skeleton-framework-based-on-seven-points-for-writing-management-dissertations.htm - Article Side

Donna Santos - About Author:
Donna Santos is a senior research writer and provides help for a management dissertation pdf and a events management dissertation.Feel free to contact for any sort of help in this regard.

Article Keywords:
management dissertation pdf, events management dissertation

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!