The world is moving very fast around us like a frenzy, every one running in fast pace to get success and money. In this crazy world parents of kids are getting pressurized. At a very small age of 2 and 3, parents want to enroll their children to school. While compulsory school start ages vary worldwide, at some places the law says at 4 at some suggest at the age of 5 some even at six and seven. Why a difference in opinion? And is there really an optimized time to start schooling? Is it mentioned anywhere that there is a point when a child brain is ready to begin soaking? Or are we effectively wasting our time and theirs by applying premature pressure on children? What is the reason to hurry up your kid into the fight and struggle of success?

Whatâ€™s the hurry to enroll your child into schooling when itâ€™s time to play around in mud? Once a ch starts studying his/her whole life will move on studies and job and money and success; so why not give him time and space to get ready with full strength? Why not let him play and enjoy the happiness which the nature showers when we are small? At least when the child is in age of 3 to 4 parents should not hurry to send kids to school in fact they should teach their children at home.

Children starts learning behavior and start developing habits by looking up at parents so teach them good manners and etiquette's not in words but by presentation in your own behavior and habits, that should be the first step of home education. Second step can be of play and learn technique in which teach and recognize the child with the surrounding while playing with them. This will help them more than their enrollment in school.

Parents should send their children to nursery school after the age of 3 or 4. That will be right time when they can take a step towards studying. Parents should not find a nursery school which is only good at teaching, in fact parents should find a school which can teach children while playing. School should also fix an age at which they will take admission for nursery kids, school should be start with more of play and learning system then with only learning around the book.

School and parents should not rush to develop a nerdy child who can compete IIT and medical, in fact they should make a knowledgeable child which can explore himself in the entire world towards success. Hence, we should not force our child to start learning at very early age, as if he has started gaining pressure in their childhood then it is really very difficult for him to overcome from their daily burden, so let him play and enjoy the life up to 4-5 years and then send him school for education, to learn with zeal and enjoy.
