Article published on May 16th 2012 | Business

As every person is identified by a name, likewise the vehicles are identified with a number. Each vehicle has a distinct number by which it is identified. These unique numbers, which are meant for identification, have to be displayed on the vehicle with the help of number plates.

The numbering of the vehicle is distinct and different in different places. Each country has its own coding and numbering method. It is generally a combination number and alphabets, which are specific identity codes. The number plates are necessary for all vehicles include motorcycle number plates. The displaying of the number plates should be as per the specification of the local law. The authorities specify the position, size and color of the number plates and these specifications have to be followed meticulously.

There are also specifications governing the size of the number plate and the size of the letters to be used for writing numbers. Number plates are generally required to be displayed at the front and rear of the vehicle. In case of casualties, road accidents, the details of the owner are traced with the help of the vehicle numbers. The number plates play a major role in finding out the identity of the persons who commit accidents on the road. They play a vital role as the number of the vehicle noted can reveal all the details of the owner. It is interesting to know that no two vehicles having the same number can be found anywhere. The number plates have some distinctions, which are based on the category of the vehicle or the person using them. Like VIPs and Government, vehicles have a distinct number. The color of the number plate also indicates whether the vehicle is a personal one or a commercial vehicle.

Finally, it can be concluded that the number plates are the identity of the vehicle and motorcycle number plates can give up all the details of the vehicle and the owner.
