Roger James Hamilton and Wealth Creation as the Secondary Nature of Man by Corwin Smith

Article published on December 12th 2011 | Business

Roger James Hamilton was born as a normal individual. He received the best schooling education in the country of Honk Kong. After his schooling he left for the USA and joined the Trinity College, Cambridge University. He left the college with soaring spirits and with his peckers all up. The dreams in his eyes about becoming one of the most successful entrepreneurs in the world would just not leave him. He worked hard and was very sure that one day the education that he has received and the experience that he was getting would one day make him what he wanted to become-The most successful entrepreneur in the world. But somewhere down the line something went wrong.

And that something wrong was bound to happen. The reason being that the financial system and the education about that system that had been ingrained in his mind was a flawed one, and the desire and the planning that he had in his mind regarding his future were not in consonance with the principles of existing controlling system of wealth creation. And then Roger James Hamilton took one of the wisest of decisions regarding his career. He parted ways with the existing economic system and went in search of a system of wealth creation that would gel with not only his own dreams and desires but would also solve the problems of millions of people around the world who had been at the receiving end of the exiting system.

And his zealous approach towards finding the new system and his passionate rebellion against the present system led him to the ultimate truth, more often that not the problem that bothers us for so long compels us to behave like a mad elephant bull in search of some complex solution. But in almost all the cases the solution is so simple that it can surprise us all. And the solution that Roger James Hamilton found was as simple as anything could be. The solution was that the man desiring wealth forgets that there is something more powerful than the man himself. And wealth is just a creation of man himself.

To put it in simple words Roger James Hamilton discovered that nature plays a very important role in almost all the activities that human being is involved in. And the same principle applies to the act of wealth creation. According to Roger it is the primary duty of the human being to find the human being that nature has created in him. And once that happen, the act of wealth creation would become nothing but his secondary nature.
