Article published on June 29th 2012 | Business

No one had ever heard of the word â€˜pewsâ€™ during the early days of the Christian realm. Also, there were zero religious complexes such as cathedrals, chapels, and churches. But the moment Christianity developed into a longtime religion in nations such as Germany, Italy, and France, large religious buildings began to pop up in towns and cities.

In the first centuries of Christianity, spiritual activities were conducted while the attendees stood. In fact, some traditions were done covertly inside subterranean passages at the peak of severe Christian prejudice. Pews were a fairly modern innovation, as they were introduced in the 1700s.

Pews of ancient times were divided into partitions: one to be used by the average person and another pew for a particular class of people distinguished by their economic status or rank of influence. Before civil rights were required, some denominations in Christianity used different pews for Caucasians and African Americans. Luckily, these forms of bias are less evident at this day and age.

Among the three chief one-god faiths that may be traced back to Abraham (Judaism, Islam, and Christianity), only Islam does not have pews in the mosques. Islamic followers conduct their customs barefoot and on the floor. Christians, meanwhile, have various types of apparatuses in their religious buildings.

Today, most church pews for sale come in diverse types of lumber like mahogany, walnut, pine, maple, cherry, and oak. They at times are built with wood coatings like color, gloss, light, dim, matte, and shiny. The preferred lumber and lumber coating are based on the dimensions of the pew, and also the general design and assembly of the structure. The length of a pew will depend on the surface plan of the chapel to make the most pleasant seating plans for the church attendees. Church pews are typically made with two timber panels for the pew's skeleton, central supports, and two planks for its edges.

Some modern church pews for sale can also be cushioned to provide relief for the attendees. Padded pews are suitable for cathedrals which carry out long customs. Smaller pews with a number of individual sections will perfectly serve a community mainly made up of senior members and people suffering from health handicaps. Shorter pews may also provide accessibility and greater church aisle space for the members.

Then again, preserving church pews may not be an easy chore, especially if the religious rituals are conducted frequently, and are also accompanied by the many daily attendees. The procedure of pew refinishing can also be based on the nature of the styles and carvings; basic layouts are easy to preserve. In contrast, when the church pews are crafted from more durable materials, and the attendees treat the pews well, the pews could survive a lifetime. If you desire to learn more about the subject, you can visit the given site: pews.org/church_pews_history.htm.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/social-and-physical-importance-of-pews-for-churches.htm - Article Side

Earnestine Kettering - About Author:

For more details, search a church pews for sale and a pew refinishing in Google for related information.

Article Keywords:
church pews for sale, pew refinishing

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!