Richard and Sandra, a young and successful couple living in Toronto. This is the day, the day their dream is coming true. The dream to actually see their house being finally ready. Yes, they bought and old house and they got it dirt cheap and decided to redo it. Starting from the windows, the outer walls, the carpets inside, the roof, the interior almost everything was changed as they wanted their house to look like a new one. After all, they have been saving for the past ten years, putting off all their holiday plans, even shelving off as trivial a thing as going out for dinner. Basically they wanted to put all their efforts to own this property and finally call a house their own. Having lived in rented accommodation, in large apartments all their life, when they first saw the advertisement in a local newspaper and drove down to meet this expat couple who wanted to sell their house before they move out of the country, it took them not much time to decide. It was all picture perfect.

Once the interior designer was done with his bit and Sandra and Richard found everything inside the house exactly what they wanted, their joy knew no bound and in some time they wrapped up the lease with their current apartment, rented a truck and moved lock stock and barrel to their own house. It was all looking very good till about six months or so till it rained one night. As Richard woke up the next morning, to his horror he found that their library that was on the upper floor was almost full of water as there was a leaked roof. Soon it was time for Richard and Sandra to get down to the ugly business of getting it all fixed up. This may happen to any one of you if you are not careful in selecting the right partners and where Richard and Sandra went wrong was in not selecting the right Toronto roofers when it came to a crucial part of the house which was the roof.
