Used Cars: How to Find the Best Buy at a Bargain Price by Stelle Courney

Article published on May 3rd 2012 | Business

Buying a used car instead of a new one is a great way to save money. However, many people avoid buying a used car because they donâ€™t want to buy someone elseâ€™s problems. While it is true that buying a used car sometimes involves risk, used cars have a lot of advantages that may make them the better choice for you.

The main advantage of buying a used car is the lower price. Everything from the down payment and monthly bills to insurance and the price tag is significantly lower with a used car than that of a new one. The main disadvantage of used cars is that itâ€™s used, so the car may be void of warranty and you may be vulnerable to car problems. However, there are a number of steps you can take to reduce the risks of buying a used car.

Look for used cars that still have a portion of their original warranty. Most late model cars have a 3-year, 36,000-mile warranty period. If you buy a model thatâ€™s less than 3 years old, you can have a vehicle that has a year or more of its warranty left. Just make sure that the warranty is fully transferable to a new owner.

Do a background check on your preferred vehicle to learn about problems that may be inherent with the model. You can find information about safety-related defects on a particular vehicle model at the website of The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. You can also search for vehicle forums that talk about the model youâ€™re interested in. Itâ€™s a good bet that if a car has problems, vehicle owners will have discussed it.

Find out if a used car is a Certified Pre-Owned (CPO) vehicle. CPO vehicles are late model used vehicles that usually have less than 50,000 miles and have been given the necessary repair and maintenance before putting it on sale. CPO Toronto used cars are generally well-maintained. They are the â€œeye candiesâ€• of the used car market.

Inspect the vehicle. Even if a particular make and model has a great reputation for quality, the vehicle you want may not be well-maintained. Bring along a mechanic to take a look at the vehicle when you visit the Toronto used cars dealer. If the dealer refuses, thatâ€™s a sign you should walk out the door and look for a used car somewhere else.

While the fear of spending your hard-earned money on something that could break down is totally understandable, these tips can help you buy a good used car that you need. For more Toronto used cars buying tips, visit auto-broker-magic.com/cheap-used-cars.html.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/used-cars-how-to-find-the-best-buy-at-a-bargain-price.htm - Article Side

Stelle Courney - About Author:
For more details, search a Toronto used cars in Google.

Article Keywords:
toronto used cars

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!