Having your very own car is virtually every personâ€™s dream. Your years of working hard and saving up finally allows you to make that dream come true. For this reason, it pays to ensure youâ€™re getting something that provides value for your money.

Even if youâ€™re getting a used car instead of a new one, you virtually still take part of Indianapolisâ€™ automotive history. Indianapolis is a major racing center, home to the popular IndyCar Series. The Indianapolis Motor Speedway hosts three major racing events annually: the Brickyard 400, the Red Bull Indianapolis Grand Prix, and the well-known Indianapolis 500. Indianapolis is once a rival of Detroit as a large automobile manufacturer, with carmakers like Stutz Motor Company, Parry Auto Company and the still-operating Duesenberg.

Youâ€™re surely raring to take a loved one out for a drive or hang out with your best buds. Before you do any of that, though, observe some basic precautions to avoid any hiccups after acquiring your car from the used car showroom. Letâ€™s cover some common steps to narrow things down.

One thing you should do right away is to clean your car thoroughly. You clean both the outside like the usual windows and doors, and the inside such as your engine bay, underside and around the transmission. Let your vehicle cool down for at least 10 minutes before doing that, though, and cover your battery terminals so they wonâ€™t get soaked. If thereâ€™s an odor in your car seats inside, y can use dryer sheets under the seats and some carpet cleaners.

Next, check your carâ€™s brakes and tires, especially the inner sidewall for any uneven wear on the tires. Use your hand to feel for any rips, cracks, or items like screws that may be stuck in the grooves. Find an empty street to speed up your car then slam on the brakes to detect loud squealing, pulling or shaking, something not all used cars Indianapolis drivers readily do.

You can also take your car back to the Indianapolis used cars dealer you got it from for an oil change if you havenâ€™t done that yet. If your used car dealer has a service center, you have the opportunity to address any problems on the spot with them. Look at their parts and service prices for future reference.

As a recap, make sure to thoroughly clean your car, check its brakes and tires, and have your car inspected. Make sure youâ€™re getting quality used cars in Indianapolis and avoid lemons at any cost. You can read more about used cars at usedcars.about.com.
