One of the best things about a WSI franchise is that it offers a combination of the benefits of being in business for yourself and having a traditional employment situation. Every franchise is part of the WSI family, able to draw on resources such as training, common information sources, and so forth. However, each is also a business unto itself, and a franchise owner is able to look at the profitability question in a whole new way â€" as the boss!

In a traditional employment arrangement, there is a certain amount of job comfort. After all, there is a clearly-defined set of goals and rules that have to be met, and the employee gets paid for doing so. As long as the parent company remains profitable, the employee should have a job.

However, that statement right there shows the nature of the beast: the parent companyâ€™s profitability is the key concern. Many middle managers who were doing quite well, have found themselves out of work in recent years, because the company as a whole needed to cut back. Many of us â€“ in one way or another â€“ have felt the pressures from the economic challenges of recent years.

The good news is that many of these workers have many more skills at organizing people, arranging supply chains and working contact lists than they might realize. This is why a WSI franchise is an outstanding opportunity for them, and a chance to worry about the profitability of their organization on a personal level, rather than an abstract one they are removed from by levels of management.

In a franchise, the owner is in business for himself or herself.

You can focus on your organizationâ€™s work load hands-on, and see what efforts are paying off. You have control of the whole local organization, and you have a direct connection with the profits that come in. You have earned them, and they come to you at the end of the day. For those of us interested in running small businesses but enjoy having some of the support structure of more traditional employment, the WSI franchise is clearly a win-win opportunity.

You too, can explore your own options for owning your own business! To read more about the benefits of the WSI Franchise Opportunity, visit http://bit.ly/WSIFranchiseOpportunity
