A WSI franchise is owned and operated by a digital marketing expert. So what is it about digital marketing that makes it such an attractive tool?

One of the most overlooked areas is the interactive nature of the experience. Look at some of the most successful marketing trends of recent years â€" alternate reality games (ARG), flashmobs, viral video and so on. The common element of these is the interactivity they offer.

Many people can play in an ARG, and just as many show up to numerous flashmob events. Even viral video has the participatory angle of each viewer of the video sending it onward to others for their own enjoyment and consumption.

Compare that to more traditional advertising. People donâ€™t interact with billboards or posters, they donâ€™t participate in commercials on television or radio.

So a large part of digital marketing is being able to provide an experience that those being advertised to is an interactive one. People want to know that their feedback is heard and understood, and when they get to play along in bringing a product to fruition, they feel a sense of engagement and identification with the product. And that feeling often translates into big sales.

As an expert in digital media marketing, you will be able to help your clients understand the digital marketing world.

You will help them create an experience that can reach directly out to their customers and bring those customers into the process directly, where they can share their ideas and feedback in a way that the business can better understand, because theyâ€™re talking right to each other.

Again, compared to the very limited number of options that traditional advertising campaigns offer, itâ€™s really no contest between traditional and digital. One is what people need, and the other is what people sometimes settle for.
