This time of year is perhaps the best for traveling, better than chilly November-December too, at least I conceive so, and the reason behind this is that we turn to be more participating at this time. Why so? Well, temperature affects every single component of human body by means of its effects on the rate of ATP hydrolysis and/or resynthesis. So at cold muscle temperatures, reduced power output is expected in humans. Itâ€™s scientific. Now letâ€™s take it simple. We hardly wish to come out o blanket during winters and do nothing but gaze out things around us. So for sightseeing, itâ€™s ok. But when it comes to explore nature and adventure, youâ€™ll surely think twice or thrice.

Now summer is at its uttermost and the sun is scorching outside. Nothing seems better than planning a trip to some cool destination for an exciting excursion to nature.
