The People's Republic of Bangladesh tagged by India, Bay Of Bengal and partly by Myanmar has an area of 143,998 km2 situated on 24 00 N, 90 00 E. In one of the most thickly inhabited country in the world, it is difficult to think that there is more space for nature. Then you witness a special relationship between the two. The "beautiful" country, or so they say, has a terrain that is flat with some plans alluvial hillsides in the bottom of this, and with a tropical climate, you must add a land rich in culture as described 55.39% of the country.

The country's highest point is the Keokradong, with an altitude of only 1230 meters, and the lower point is Indian Ocean which is 0 meters. The weather, being tropical, summer from March to June is both very hot and humid monsoon from June to October are wet, although it is hot and humid, while winters are mild October to March.

Bangladesh is worldâ€™s 7th largest most populated country in the world and according to 2008 census it had a population of about 300,000,000. The people of Bangladesh also refer to the country's major ethno-linguistic group and official language is Bengali. 88% of the majority of the Bengali is Islam, the state religion, 11%, is Hinduism and other religion like Christianity and Buddhism is 1%. With the ethnic split by language, 98% of the population account for population statistics and the speakers of Bengali (Bangla), while the rest are migrants and indigenous tribal groups. Bangladesh has been a part of the rich literary heritage of Bangladesh, where the first Charyapada literary text, dates from the eighth century is well versed in. Although Bengali is the national language there are 10 other minor language like Chittagonian, Sylheti, Urdu and other tribal languages.

People who meet in these parts are the cherries on top of a delicious ice cream destination that is mostly unknown and has not been advertised in the guide books. Beyond the capital, Dhaka, in the flat landscape are fantastic national parks that are consistent with the call of the Royal Bengal tiger, the enigmatic mountain and the hidden gems of Buddhist empires in Rangamati, the revered Shait Gumbad Masjid in Bagerhat, green tea gardens of Sylhet, and vibrant coral of the island of St. Martin. World longest of the long coast of Cox's Bazar is also one of the popular tourist destination which you must add to your chart list during your Bangladesh travel.

Truly, Bangladesh has everything all at once, and a little too much from its natural beauty to its mouth watering foods. Bengals also love their food, and is a hobby that will surely enjoy when not playing cricket, but with the overwhelming poverty of the country, people are glad to have eaten a meal a day. The food is varied by region and great, but rice and curry are some of the commodities. Spices are widely used and which are basic components, turmeric, coriander and chillies more than the rest. Bangladeshi cuisine is similar to Indian cuisine but here beef is integral to the cuisine. Well if you are thinking about accommodation in the country than you need not worry for there are many luxurious hotels in Bangladesh where you stay comfortable.
