A lot of people are considering a career as an LPN or a licensed practical nurse because it is known to have a big salary. If you have a low-paying job then the great LPN salaries can be really tempting. Why would you settle for a low income when you can earn a bigger salary as a licensed practical nurse?

The primary role of the LPN is to provide patient care in various medical settings. This means that you will be caring for patients at hospitals or clinics. The job is not that difficult which is why a lot of people are lured by the great LPN salaries. A licensed practical nurse can earn as much as $40,000 annually. The salary rate is not the same for all of the states. Some states have bigger LPN salaries while the other states offer smaller salaries. The lowest hourly rate for the LPN is $14 but it can go as high as $21 per hour in other states.

The great LPN salaries are not the same in every state. Some states have even bigger salaries for licensed practical nurses. This is based on several factors such as the cost of living. States with higher costs of living also offer higher salaries for the LPN. There are also some states that have a higher demand for the services of the LPN but there are only a few professionals with a licensed practical nurse degree. In this case where the demand is high and the supply of LPNs is low then it follows that the salaries are also higher. If there are a lot of LPNs in one state then they will also be offered a lower rate compared to the other states.

The kind of facility that the LPN works at also affects the salary rates. Some LPNs are required by their job to travel to various locations and this type of LPN job has a higher pay. Private medical facilities also offer higher salary rates for the LPN while the hospitals have a lower LPN salary rate. When working in a hospital, the time of the shift also affects the salary of the LPN. Day shifts have lower salary rates compared to the night shifts.

Even when you are just a fresh graduate, you will already be earning Great LPN Salaries. As years pass and you gain more experience then you will also earn a higher salary rate. The more experience that you have in the field, the higher your salary rate gets.
