Body hair removal for men: Why is it necessary?

by Tasha Peach

Article published on January 28th 2012 | Fashion

Though men usually donâ€™t think about removing excess hair from their body, in todayâ€™s professiona and competitive lifestyle, itâ€™s emerging as a growing trend not only among celebrities or athletes, but also a common man. When it comes to Hollywood actors like Leonardo DiCaprio and Brad Pitt, in order to look attractive, they leave their chests spotless in front of the camera. It is a general notion that most women desire men with clean-shaven body and smooth-skin look. Body hair removal for athletes holds a total different purpose and is done entirely for other reasons. Swimmers get rid of extra body hair to reduce hydrodynamic drag resistance caused by them. As a result, their movements under the water become more fluid for better performance. Hair No More cream is a number one choice of most people, who want a clear and smooth hairless skin.

The reason why most cyclists want to keep their legs hair-free is that after any crash, more asphalt is grabbed by their legs, which can lead to severe skin tears. Also, it becomes easier to clean and bandage hair-free skin when you get road injuries. Most cyclists think that smooth and clean legs can move more quickly to slow them down. Although, there are mixed beliefs among most people about the extent to which hair can affect the speed of their movements. But when it comes to hair removal for men, they shouldnâ€™t feel ashamed or hesitate to deforest unwanted and excess hair from their bodies. In 1920, the earliest bodybuilders understood the benefit of a clean-shaven hairless body as it allowed them to show off every single bulky muscle on their bodies. One of them was Charles Atlus, who became famous with a clean body after modelling on a video showing his entire spotless body for others to admire. Many men want most parts of their body free from any hair to avoid any skin irritation or itching due to sweating.

Thankfully, there are many hair removal methods available for both men and women. Shaving is considered as one of the most common way to chop down the excess hair on your body. Waxing is a method that is considered as the best for hair removal for women, though it can be a bit painful. It involves spreading hot wax on the parts of the body you want hairless and then ripping it off the strip. Likewise, sugaring is also one of the trusted methods to get a clean and smooth skin. It consists of a mixture of water, lemon, gum Arabic, citric acid, and sugar. Electrolysis may sound a little threatening for some, but it is an effective method that works by zapping the hair at its root by needle to kill it. Silkn SensEpil is a popular device that works on the principle of Intense Pulsed light technology. The light energy gets transformed into heat energy and affects the functioning of the hair follicles. This is in turn delays the normal hair growth cycle for a long term.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/fashion-articles/body-hair-removal-for-men-why-is-it-necessary.htm - Article Side

Tasha Peach - About Author:
Hair removal is no longer a trend follow only by women as men have also become conscious about their outer skin appearance.Our product a Hair No More cream and a Silkn SensEpil which is a device are number one choice of most people, who want a clear and smooth hairless skin. Learn more about effective methods of a hair removal for men and women.

Article Keywords:
hair removal for men,Hair No More cream,Silkn SensEpil

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!