Article published on April 24th 2012 | Real Estate

People have always thought of home rental as a money pit that will blow a hole in your finances. Many prefer owning a home because it is a much more stable investment. But in todayâ€™s economic situation, a house purchase can create a deeper hole in your pocket, compared with rental. This is why more people prefer home rental itâ€™s just more advantageous that way.

Basically, home rental means you live in a house you do not own, and you are a tenant that pays monthly dues. These payments include your rent, and other dues like security and maintenance fees as indicated in your lease contract. House rental is an ideal middle ground between owning a house and renting an apartment because you still have a spacious backyard and sense of homeownership without the huge monthly mortgage payments. The landlord is also responsible for repairs and maintenance, so thatâ€™s two less concerns for you.

Cost of Ownership

One of the main advantages of renting over buying a home in Huntsville is the huge price difference. Owning a home can be very expensive you have to pay an upfront down-payment plus points, and the monthly mortgage including interest. When you rent, all you have to worry about is your scheduled monthly rent and your utility bills.

Upfront Cost

Renting a home is considered a better choice for people who have minimal funds. Owning a home means paying 20% down-payment up-front, as well as additional charges depending on how many points you want to shave off the total. With home rental, all you pay up-front is usually a monthâ€™s worth of rent and deposit.

Home as Investment

One of the biggest selling points that people usually think with regards to home ownership is its increased value over time. This might have been true before but today, the housing market is very volatile, and you can end up paying more than what the house is worth. By living in Huntsville AL rental homes, you can invest your savings in more profitable ventures.

Flexibility

Another advantage of living in Huntsville rental homes is flexibility in residence. You can move out whenever you want provided there is a clear provision about this term in your contract. You can also choose to live in the middle of the city as most community builders have homes for rent in very convenient places.

Home rental is advantageous especially for new couples, young families, and those saving up for a house purchase.
