Enjoying the Rich Flavor of Turkish coffee made Possible by Briki by Chris Adam

Briki is conventional coffee maker from Turkey. 100% pure copper or brass is used to prepare this utensil. It can easily form a part of any kitchen for its elegant appearance, no matter it's a part of your regularly used utensil or is there a showpiece. Briki is actually a Greek word and its Turkish form is known as Cezve. The utensil is distinctly different from other such coffee mugs. In the regular coffee mugs, the handle is always smaller than the body. Also the handle is square or semi-circular in the cups. But in the case of brikiBriki, itâ€™s just the reverse case. The handle has no particular geometric shape; it's neither square nor circular. Also, itâ€™s unusually long and is bigger than the body of the mug. This peculiarity in the shape makes it so popular.

Briki can be used whenever you want to prepare either tea or coffee. With the long handle, one can easily hold the container strongly and there is no chance of it falling down. Also due to the weirdly long handle, the number of accidents from the flames or hot utensil is reduced significantly. The way coffee is traditionally prepared is much different from the way it is prepared in Briki. In the recent times, the espresso coffee has become widely popular all over the world. Its great taste is no match to the coffee prepared in Briki.

The best part of preparing coffee by brikiBriki is that the thickness and taste of milk is most felt by this process. One thing you need to remember that preparing coffee using the Briki requires some more effort than the ordinary or ready-made coffee you drink normally. But your effort is not wasted as the taste of the coffee is heavenly. The beverage to be prepared must be done at a very low flame to enjoy the best taste. Otherwise the taste becomes slightly bitter.
