Effects of African Presence in Early Europe by Odis Frank

Article published on August 7th 2012 | Society

If you think that people of each ethnicity remained in their geographical boundaries, think again! Contrary to the popular belief, Africans were not confined to their native place. In fact, the history of Europe is replete with examples of African presence in early Europe as well as their influence. They have contributed to many departments and held important positions of honor and respect in the European culture and society. From history to literature, Africans in Europe have made a mark for themselves by being great and renowned contributors to their respective fields. Let us see myriad contributions made by them in the era of Early Europe.

History and the world of poems:

The history of early Europe as chronicled, has enough proofs of the African presence in early Europe in the form of books, manuscripts etc. Noteworthy among them are Kenneth the Niger who ruled a few provinces in the Scottish Highlands, Viking Thorhall, Earl Thorfinn and Queen Charlotte Sophia, significant other of the King George III of England who ruled until 1820. A similar version of Africans in Europe can be traced to the poem, which was penned when she married King George, and during her coronation as a queen as well.

The society and the trade:

Slavery was rampant in those days. The most likely candidates for being slaves were blacks. They were the most preferred, as they were sincere and belonged to a country which was weak and under developed. The Africans in Europe helped them in doing various chores and therefore one can see their presence in the making of many monuments existing in the times of early Europe. The trading angle between Europe and African nations for precious items like gold, spices as well as human slaves brought out a true meaning of the African presence in early Europe and let the world know about them.

Considering the examples presented above, one can safely say that the African presence in early Europe has brought in a pleasant change in the entire culture prevalent at the time. There was a time when they were considered outcasts and were subjected to racism. However, with time, they managed to change the 'air' around them and have since entered the 'corridors of power' amassing wealth, name and fame. The Africans in Europe have indeed made a mark for themselves in the history of Europe and there is definitely no doubt about it. They have earned a place in the history of early Europe that they rightly deserve.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/society-articles/effects-of-african-presence-in-early-europe.htm - Article Side

Odis Frank - About Author:
Odis Frank is USA Author. he provides black presence can be found in early Europe during Neolithic times, the Roman world, the formation of Eastern and Western Christendom, the Medieval Period, and through the Renaissance.He has applied his knowledge and understanding to a wide variety of a African presence in early Europe and a African in Europe.

Article Keywords:
African presence in early Europe, African in Europe

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!