What are bath lifts?

If you are looking for information on bath lifts, you have landed on the right page. One of the highest priorities you give to your toilet and bathroom is safety. The good new is that you can easily achieve this by considering installing bath lifts. In case someone out there is wondering what these are, they are gadgets that are used to lift the bather up from the bottom of the bath tab as they can fit inside the tab. They also help you lower yourself safely into the tab. They are very comfortable as they have a solid plastic seat and backrest. In some cases the seat and backrest are made of mesh fabric with some having been enhanced with reclining mechanism and thus are adjustable to better comfort. There are different versions of bath lifts based on how they function. These are manual bath lifts, powered bath lifts, inflatable bath lifts, bath lifts with bellows and those with an alarm button.

How do bath lifts function?

There are two major types based on functioning mechanism and these are battery powered and manual bath lifts. How do they operate or function? Let us begin with the manually operated types. Manual birth lifts use the weight of the bather to hydraulically lower the person into the bath tab. After comfortably bathing you need to be lifted to the bath rim and they utilize the buoyancy of water to lift you there. The powered bath lifts operate differently. They are motor driven and this means that they need a power source which in this case it is a rechargeable battery. This battery is positioned somewhere behind the backrest and In some models it is located in the handset. Since it is obvious that the battery powered ones will not function without sufficient charge, it is part of maintenance to keep charging the battery(s) regularly.
