Article published on March 27th 2012 | Health

Dental implants are artificial tooth roots placed on the jaw to hold replacement teeth or dental bridges. Resembling a large screw, dental implants are made of titanium, a material featuring excellent corrosion resistance, unmatched durability, and high strength. It also bonds with the human bone effectively. Compared to traditional dentures, dental implants do not need support from neighboring teeth which causes alteration to the whole set of teeth. This makes dental implants â€˜friendlierâ€™ to oneâ€™s dental health in general.

There are two types of dental implants: endosteal and subperiosteal. Endosteal implants are directly fixated INTO the jawbone and usually takes at least two visits to be placed effectively. On the other hand, subperiosteal implants are fitted ONTO the jawbone, below the gum tissue, and are let to heal until the frame becomes fixed to the jawbone. In any case, see a dentist first before deciding to have any of these procedures done.

Not everyone can be a candidate for dental implants. Patients have to be in good general and oral health, have sufficient bone in the jaw to support the implant, and have healthy gum tissues that are free of disease. Dentists also suggest those who plan to have dental implants to quit smoking and excessive drinking as these substances can affect the intended result of the procedure. It is also remarkable to note that a dental implant procedure is virtually painless because anesthesia is utilized. However, once the anesthesia wears off, the patient may feel sore for a couple of days and experience bruising around the mouth.

Dental implants are designed for patients who have lost a tooth due to trauma, an accident, or periodontal disease. Those who want to get a dental implant with minimum pain and discomfort should consult a reputable dentist who is serving around the area. For instance, an Atlanta resident should ask a dentist about dental implants Atlanta GA residents love.

Like natural teeth, dental implants Atlanta GA dentists provide should be properly taken care of to function properly. It is essential to observe basic dental hygiene, like brushing and flossing every meal, to ensure their longevity. If you're not married to the idea of cleaning them by yourself, consider getting the help of an implant dentist for professional cleaning.

Dental implants Atlanta GA residents are thankful for have success rates that reach up to 95 percent. Within a few visits, you can get the smile you have lost or have been dreaming of. If you want to read more about dental implants, you can visit Colgate.com.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/health-articles/setting-the-facts-straight-things-you-should-know-about-implants.htm - Article Side

Eddie Storms - About Author:
For more details, search a dental implants Atlanta GA in Google for related information.

Article Keywords:
dental implants atlanta ga

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!