If you own a wood lot, then heating your home will be very inexpensive. If you must purchase wood, in most areas it is still very cost competitive with other fuels. Then there's the satisfaction of stacking and loading the wood, and starting and poking a wood fire. Plus, wood is a renewable resource, and it functions without electricity.

Natural Gas/Propane - Convenience is the primary attribute of gas hearth appliances - just push a button on the unit or on your remote control. Gas burns cleanly and is a North American fuel. The realism of the fire has progressed dramatically over the past five years. Units with standing pilots function without electricity.

Pellets - Nothing beats pellets for being kind to the environment. Pellets are made from recycled wood waste, burn so cleanly that EPA approval is not necessary and function automatically via an auger fuel feeding system. When power is out, pellet products require a battery back-up to function.
