Roof Replacement: Damages that Tell You It is Time for a Replacement by Elizabeth Hoffnung

Article published on April 25th 2012 | Home Improvement

A worn out roof is the last thing that any homeowner could need or want. A broken roof threatens the safety and protection of the home and its occupants, not to mention a damaged roof is unsightly. This is specifically true when leakages begin to cultivate a breeding spot for microbes. It is essential for a homeowner to be aware of when to replace his homeâ€™s roofing before these hazards occur.

Leak is a typical sign of wear and tear on the roof. Regardless of how minor the quantity of seeping water is, the homeowner ought to deal with the situation before it turns into a nightmare. Dependent upon the type of roof, there are factors that can cause a leak into the house. Then again, one should know that leakages are not restricted to water; leaks can also happen in the form of other climatic elements, including radiation, dust, and wind.

Rust on Metal Roofing

The biggest challenge of having a metal roof is corrosion. Much like a fruit decaying throughout time, metal also breaks down in a process that consists of transforming pure metal into rust. When a major area of the roof is corroded, there is a huge chance that holes may be created and leaks may begin-an obvious indicator that roof replacement is vital.

Molds and Mildew on Wooden Roofing

If not correctly varnished, wooden tiles can become a breeding ground for microbes, such as mildew and molds. These microbes generate enzymes that decay organic materials, like wood. They can weaken the fibers within the wood tiles and afterwards develop voids capable of taking in or creating a channel for water.

Hail Stone Effect on Slate

Regardless of having a humid subtropical climate, Memphis at times faces hailstorms. Hail is distinct from other types of precipitation because it is composed of balls of ice that are as hard as a rock. Plummeting from a few hundred or thousand miles from the sky, the collision is powerful enough to bring about a dent on a roof constructed from slate, which may call for overall roofing replacement according to the amount of damage. Many roofers Memphis TN endorses opt for concrete roofing for houses in locations often visited by hailstorms.

Feeble Trusses

One tactic to save on roofing replacement is covering the existing roof with the new roofing components. On the other hand, this comes with significant weight and can overpower trusses beneath. This is why Memphis roofing companies encourage replacing roofing to hinder more serious danger for the home in the future.
