â€˜Keep lightâ€™ is the mantra to enjoy a backpacking trip. When we talk about keeping light, it not only refers to your baggage but also your shoes. Till what extent you will enjoy your trip depends upon the shoes you have selected for your trip. As a backpacking trip involves a lot of walking and hiking, choosing a pair of shoes is one of the most important aspects. Having that perfect pair of shoes is as important as having an adequate backpacker travel insurance cover. It is recommended to pay complete attention on these aspects in order to have a more enjoyable trip.

Light weight flip-flops with sturdy soles and strong grip are a perfect choice for a trip that involves walking in plains. Light weight running shoes also offer you full comfort. These days canvas shoes are very popular. The reason being, they are extremely soft and take the shape of your feet making you feel light and comfortable. Even if your trip involves a lot of hiking, it is wise not to buy big and heavy hiking shoes. Many holiday destinations are too hot to wear such shoes. They are absolutely unnecessary. Nowadays, there are numerous alternatives to big boots are available in the market which are less expensive and more comfortable.

In order to avoid quick wear and tear of your walking shoes, make sure to carry at least two or three pairs of shoes if it is a year round trip. Along with this, do not forget to keep many pairs of socks. If you are travelling to a relatively hotter destination, cotton socks will work best. For colder destinations, you can opt for woollen or leather socks.

Once you are through with this, the next thing is to purchase appropriate backpacking travel insurance. Having an adequate cover is the most important thing that you can shop for to make your trip a more enjoyable experience. A backpacking trip involves a higher degree of risk as compared to other types of outings. Purchasing a travel cover is in the best interests of the backpackers.

Backpacking insurance provides you the cover against personal injury and illness, loss of money, passport and belongings, third party liability, missed departure, delayed and cancelled departure, trip interruption, cancellation and curtailment, natural disaster and much more. The level of cover can be chosen depending upon the trip duration, activities you intend to undertake, personal health and destination you are travelling to.
