Article published on July 26th 2012 | Internet

Search engine optimization is one of the most controversial parts of streamlining internet marketing and advertisement campaigns. This is mostly because of the antiquated beliefs on what actual SEO is and how it actually works. A truly effective and efficient high end web design project will undoubtedly have search engine optimization plans and finding the right ones to employ can have significant effects on the growth and efficiency of a particular website or page.

SEO is Not Just about Keywords

A lot of people have the mistaken belief that having a particular website or page optimized would involve filling it with a particular set of keywords that repeat multiple times in order to â€œgame the systemâ€• and create higher page rankings on search engines like Google, Yahoo, and Bing. However, true SEO is far from this as the process is actually an attempt to make the content of the website â€œcrawlerâ€• friendly to ensure that the websites bots can efficiently track the contents of the site.

SEO is Not Just for Text

Almost all parts of a particular website can be optimized for search engines. Sites that use particular content management systems need to ensure that all content is still accessible to the search engine crawlers even behind the CMS frontends. Images and other assets like java applets and programs should be properly â€œlabeledâ€• so that the crawlers will understand what they are for and sometimes even read their contents. Without proper optimization many crawlers will be unable to process parts certain parts of websites and pages and these parts, which may contain information being looked for on the search engines, will not appear on the search results and thus leading to wasted page views or even clients. SEO can also be applied to increase results from location based services which is very important as Texas SEO techniques might sometimes not work as well as San Diego SEO techniques in California.

SEO is Not a Magic Bullet

Search engine optimization alone cannot solve all the problems of a particular website. Content is still the most important part of a website which attracts users and customers. A website that does not help its users and is field with pages upon pages of filler text will inevitably be abandoned for better websites and no amount of SEO can fix that.

Search engine optimization is a reliable tool that webmasters, developers, and advertising agencies can use to increase the output of a particular page or website. It is an important tool but can only be as good as the content and usefulness of the page it used on.
