There is something about a cameo that it truly captivating. Be it the attention to fine detail, the elegance of the portraits, there is simply nothing quite as beautiful as a cameo, and they never go out of style. Here is a article about Cameos from Jewelry Fort Myers.

Did you know that Cameos can be made from variety of materials, such as abalone, wood, bone, coral, ivory, agate, glass, plastic, various shell types, and layered hard stone which comes in a variety of colors. Molded cameos are often made from glass. They are designed with the combination of two different colors. In most cases the colors are swirled together.

With cameos from Jewelry Fort Myers you will find that glass cameos are quite shiny while molded cameos use plastic. The wedgewood style cameos are also made from plastic. Plastic does male a great imitation shell cameo.

Older cameos were frequently created using celluloid using two colors. From time to time, but not so frequently, natural materials are molded. One method to know if a cameo is molded would be to search for a roundness within the detail and deficiencies in sharp and precise lines. To recognize glass cameos search for the existence of mold marks and side rails or cavities and ridges around the back.

Jewelry Fort Myers if you examine natural shell cameos you will see that they are created from one select piece of a shell. Natural shell is soft, so it's super easy to carve. Shell cameos are often two colors. Shell cameos possess a thin concave back, except for abalone and mother of gem that are usually flat around the back and somewhat thicker. Narural Coral Cameos are generally a single color, and possess a set flat back.

Agate cameos are created with similar technique that shell cameos are created. Agate has one primary advantage, since the carver could see the layers of color in the side and recognizes that these layers will essentially be flat. Stone is a lot harder to carve. A great hard stone cameo is frequently under created in the junction in which the portrait meets the flat plaque.

In a quick glance stone frequently appears like an applied cameo, however upon closer examination it's possible to determine so that it is stone.

Amber Cameos are rather a new comer to the marketplace place. Amber cameos are created from natural amber using the reverse intaglios being hand created.

Jewelry Fort Myers know if you use this info and practice can make it simpler to determine molded cameos from created cameos: Usually natural materials are hand carved, while glass and materials are usually molded but tend to appear carved though not so likely. Molded cameos could be two colors through the simple device of flowing one color in to the mold inside a thin layer after which following having a thicker layer of some other color.

If you're purchasing for value distinguishing the kind of cameo is quite important. However, if you're purchasing since you simply "love" the piece, then identifying the kind of cameo and also the value aren't nearly as important.

Jewelry Fort Myers recommend if you're buying a cameo because you need to combine it with your jewelry wardrobe then choose what your heart falls for, just be sure that you aren't overpaying for what you're getting. Cameos create a wonderful fashion statement! Plus they never ever go out of style.
