The Journey of Child Infancy to the Adulthood by Harry Yadav

Article published on December 17th 2011 | K-12 Education

When the baby step into this world, they grow steadily and changes rapidly. The crawl, learn to walk and make mess of things. They do lot of mischief but they also need lot of protection from the parents as initially it is dangerous for them while walking, talking and running. When the kids grow big they learn to communicate with others. They see, observe and learn, build their own personality. For parents, this is the appropriate time when they have numerous responsibilities for their rapid physical growth. Kids is always dependent on others and parents especially mother should provide physical closeness to the child in order to give them security and peace. Children always love playing and it gives them opportunity to learn about the world.

When children are born, their brain is not fully-formed, and over the first few years there's a great proliferation of connections between cells. Over adolescence there is a pruning of these connections. The brain decides which connections are important to keep, and which can be let go. All children need to feel safe. For a child this means that their parents are dependable, trustworthy and consistent in their behavior. It means that, when making decisions that affect their children, parents take into account their kid's particular physical, mental, emotional, spiritual and psychological needs and limitations as well as their strengths. All children are born with innate potential only it needs to groom them. The six and seven years of child are very important for them.

Parents is the lifelong journey with full of experiences, loving, caring, learning, teaching and shaping their kids future. Parents have to build strong bonding between their child and the trust. The child should master certain things at the particular with the guidance of the parents. They should learn to take care of their own things and they should be responsible enough to do their work on time. They learn many basics things from their parents before going to the school. It is very important to pamper a baby when they are in difficult situation or in some fuss. If you support them in their difficult times they will start trusting you and share their all feelings.

This will also make them feel safe and learn to get poised when they will grow. By the time when the child enters into a school they learn the formal skills of the life. Parents should also support their child with the new experiences and help them to build a positive image. Parents and teachers should also keep in mind that the purpose of discipline is not to punish. Essentially the purpose of discipline is to teach that bad choices result in negative consequences while allowing the child to reflect and learn more appropriate ways of responding when he/she finds himself or herself in a similar situation again. The major contribution is given be parents and teachers when the child grows to adulthood.
