When it comes to iconic cars, the Ford Mustang is a legend in its own lifetime. But that does not mean that Ford carmakers have been able to rest on their laurels. The Ford Mustang has undergone a number of significant changes since it was first introduced in 1964. Over the last decade, Ford has again reinvented this much-loved model. The latest incarnation of Ford Mustang is regarded by some car enthusiasts as the best yet. So much so that it was included on the Car and Driver 10 Best List in 2011.

The 2013 model of the new Ford Mustang GT became available from dealerships in 2012. This upgraded version of the iconic pony car delivers a massive 420 horsepower from its 5.0 litre V-8 engine. The new Ford Mustang is also available with a V-6 engine, which delivers around 320 horsepower. The new Ford Mustang comes with both manual and automatic transmission options. At the touch of a button, the automatic transmission allows for manual over-ride, should the driver prefer to take control.

For the 2013 model, Ford has improved the look of the new Ford Mustang, without losing its classic shape. The front-end has been redesigned, from the heat extractors on the hood to the LED light pipes at the headlights. For true Ford Mustang enthusiasts, there is a neat pony projection light that projects the Ford Mustang logo on to the road beneath the mirrors when the button is pressed to unlock the doors.

The interior of the new Ford Mustang has also undergone a transformation. The voice-activated Ford Sync system has been installed, Recaro seats are fitted as standard and performance data is displayed via the new Track Apps option. With Track Apps, the new Ford Mustang can report back to the driver on acceleration and braking performance.

The new Ford Mustang offers drivers the dream combination of value for money and impressive horsepower. The new Ford Mustang is that rare breed - a muscle car designed for everyday driving.
