Social Marketing & Advertising Agency in San Francisco by Judah Getz

Article published on February 25th 2012 | Marketing

An advertising agency in San Francisco - RBM, has been successfully running social media campaigns for more than 3 years at the service of some of the biggest brands in the world. Their programs start by defining how they can create value for an organization, which they codify into clearly measurable goals.

Their social media programs are successful because they know how to connect consumersâ€™ passion points with brands, using great campaign ideas and state-of-the-art social technology. They will study a brand, research and unearth the audience archetypes in detail, and then devise a program to connect the two together. The results are stellar, award-wining campaigns that generate enormous value.

At RBM they do things a bit differently: they seek to enable a business through social media, rather than simply run creative ideas or campaigns. They create a road map for their clients to deploy a social infrastructure across their organization, taking into consideration team restheirces/assets, governance, existing marketing infrastructure, and the unique technology needs.
