Whenever you hear the words â€˜Blah Blah Blahâ€™, the first thing that must come up to your mind is of something rubbish. Therefore it can be assumed that no one would like to have the name of anything in such a manner. Most of the people around us can hardly think of having such a name of something. However in the year of 1998, there was a group of people who had dared to use these words as the name of their musical band.

In the summer days of 1998, four Englishmen from the southern France started their musical career at the local bars after spending years in the typical music industry. Right from the beginning, they chose to become famous not with their catchy brand name, but with their musical quality. Therefore, they never spend lots of time for choosing any fashionable band name. In contrast, they chose to name their band as the Blah Blah Blah band. In that case, their choice for this unusual band name had already made them stand apart from the others.

In the formation days of the Blah Blah Blah band, there was a craze for the lead people of this band. Robert was the lead vocalist as well as the front man of this band while Hardman was on the drums. These people had already started to mesmerize the people of Iowa with their delightful guitar melodies. Within the few days of their performances in the local bars, they had gathered lots of fan following behind them. Therefore, it was obvious that a huge number of bassists and guitarists had lined up to join these musicians. After many audition and interviews with these people, two Frenchmen, Lionel Baldassare on bass and Stephane Benguigui on guitar joined the band to make the Blah Blah Blah music more beautiful.

When this Blah Blah Blah band started to get the proper recognition, they started working with the bigger musical bands wishing to earn some name and fame. Within a shorter period of time, their popularity had scattered all over the world. Gradually, they started performing in the larger shows where over 250 music enthusiasts had joined to enjoy their music. In other words, this helped them big to emerge as better musical band from Chicago.

In short, with the soulful touch and the melodious tunes, the Blah Blah Blah music has managed to take some place in the heart of the music enthusiasts. Therefore, it was evident that this music band from Chicago would win the souls of the music lovers from all over the world.
