Roger James Hamilton and the Altitude of Wealth Creation on Mighty Bedrock by Corwin Smith

Article published on December 17th 2011 | Others

The story of Roger James Hamilton is not a new one. Whether it is the creation of a system or an Empire, the rudimentary principles remain the same. And the building of one empire can aptly fortify the aforementioned statement.

One of the biggest empires ever created in the world was created by the mighty Genghis Khan. The great Mongol emperor before embarking on his mission to conquer the world had to do a lot of spade work. In those times, almost all the Mongols were divided into different tribes that were brutal in nature but were continuously at war with each other. So the first that that Genghis did was to unite the warring Mongol tribes under one flag. Once that was achieved, he managed to raise an army that was ruthless, that was hungry and that was willing to do anything that their leader the courageous Genghis Khan would ask them to do. And once the Mongols were united under one flag, they realized that now the time has come to embark on the mission to conquer whatever comes their way. And in a whirlwind campaign the might Mongolian army defeated the Chinese, defeated the Persian Empire, and conquered everything that came within their sight. And in just no time Genghis Khan was the ruler of a kingdom that spread from Eurasia in the west to the far corners of the eastern lands like Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand and all such similar countries. The biggest empire ever created in the world was done not only by means of sword but also with a lot of wisdom and knowledge. Coming back to the present times something similar is needed in the world of finance that can lay the foundations of a system (not an empire) that can smoothly take care of the flow of money across the world. But it is not the impression of the mighty Mongol empire that needs to be the source of inspiration. It is the ideas and the thought process, and the strategies that these medieval warriors used. And Roger James Hamilton did exactly that in order to put in place a system of wealth creation that would put an end to all the botherations that trouble the economies of the nations as well as the finances of the common man on the street.

Roger James Hamilton discovered that there is only one way of improving the present system masterminding the flow of money across the globe. And that way was to remove the presence of the human mind from the system and replace it with something that is smarter, intelligent and pristine in its tenor. And that thing is none other than the Nature itself.

Roger James Hamilton did exactly that. He imbued the activity of wealth creation with the wealth of nature and that change transmogrified and elevated the wealth creating activity of the man to an altogether different plane, and a different altitude.
