Potential Risks of Breast Enhancement Compared to Natural Methods to Get Bigger Breasts by JANNET Conrad

Article published on June 29th 2012 | Book Marketing

All surgical procedures have a degree of risk associated with them, but very often, breast enhancement surgery is viewed as having no risk, due to the fact that it is such a common procedure. However, since breast surgery usually means inserting a foreign object in your body, it really has more possible risks than most other common operations.

conversely, natural breast enhancement is entirely free of risk as long as you are a healthy, normal woman.

Some of the risks with cosmetic breast augmentation are as follows:

Scars may form in the area of the implant within the breast. This can twist and drag the breast out of shape and can also be very painful.

There is absolutely no chance at all of scar tissues developing if using all natural ways to gain breast size.

Implants can leak or even rupture completely. Remember, implants are not timeless. They need to be renewed every ten years or so. At this time they must be surgically removed and replaced with new implants. Even so, sometimes the implants burst or start leaking after only a few years, or even a few months in some women. If you opt not to have replacement implants after the damaged ones are taken out, you may be left with skin that looks stretched and wrinkly.

You would never be left with damaged skin when utilizing natural techniques. The breasts enlarge gradually over a period of months and new skin tissues grow along with the breasts, as opposed to the skin suddenly stretching in an unnatural way.

Sensitivity problems can occur with cosmetic breast enhancement. Breasts can be much less sensitive to touch, or worse, too sensitive to the point of being sore to touch.

The opposite happens with natural breast enhancement. You will never lose feeling and while feeling might be increased, it will never be too increased.

There can also be problems with breast feeding because surgery can cause a decrease in milk production. This is often reported.

The opposite is the case when using natural herbs to get bigger breasts. Some of these herbal products have milk boosting properties and are can be of benefit to breast-feeding mothers.

Implants can make it difficult to get an accurate mammogram reading because the objects in the breast may obscure some of the view.

Herbs and extracts used to increase breast size naturally, have extraordinary health benefits on the female system. They aid to prevent illness and disease, such as breast cancer.

When thinking about having breast implants, weigh the good points up against the possible disadvantages and also compare these to techniques to enhance breast size without the need for surgery. Natural methods can be very effective and free of risk. Actually they deliver heaps of additional benefits and can even help you look and feel younger and sexier as well.
