By now you've observed the signs - We Buy Gold!  They're everywhere these days, from pawn brokers shops to jewellery retailers and beyond.  Some scrap gold buyers have set up shop in old buildings and do nothing at all but buy and look at sell gold.  And of course, there are numerous on-line buyers ready to shell out top dollar for gold.  If you're considering of selling your gold for additional money then you may be overwhelmed by the course of action.  Fortunately, there are a few uncomplicated steps that you can take which will ensure that you don't make any selections you'll end up regretting later.  Here's a quick guide to the process.

First of all, collect up your gold products that you want to sell and separate them by karat amount.  Then use a modest scale to weigh out the quantities you have of each pile.  discover an online gold calculator to determine out just what the average worth of your gold is.  Definiately in mind that the rough value you end up with is almost certainly more than any buyer will give you since they have to make a profit as well, but it should give you a good idea as to what a good price will be when you set out to sell gold.

Now you'll need to get cash for gold, you will need to find a scrap gold buyer.  If you want to sell regionally, you'll fundamentally drive to the supplier and offer to sell gold to them.  You may perhaps be able to haggle a bit but in most cases prices will be fairly firm.  Online, the approach is a bit more complex.  You'll need to request a shipping bundle, store your gold in it and list each item, and then mail it off to the buyer in question.  When they receive it they'll review the items, appraise them, and then determine the price they're willing to pay.

Some online scrap gold buyers will contact you via mobile phone or email to make an offer while others will merely cut you a cheque and mail it automatically.  If you don't like the sum you'll have a few days to return the cheque and have your gold returned to you.  The purchasers who contact you first are Commonly a better option since there's less risk.  No matter what selection you choose upon, all that you need to do is keep the basics in mind when you sell gold and you'll be sure to have an encounter that doesn't leave you wishing you'd left your gold boxed up in the closet.
